21.

One of the goals of Middle School is for students to take more ownership over organising their materials, meeting deadlines and completing work.

At the moment, Middle School students who are not ready for class, do not complete homework and/or have late assessments are dealt with at the discretion of the individual subject teacher.

An alternative approach is more structured and involves the same penalty across all subjects. For example, if the rule is that after three instances of not having the right materials for class a student has to stay in for 10 minutes of recess, if a student is unprepared twice for a class with Teacher X and then soon after is unprepared again for a class with Teacher Y the student would then stay in.

Do you support the Middle School adopting a more structured approach to dealing with student organisation and completion of homework?
